

7 Days to Reclaim Your Voice

A devotional guide for women

By Taylor Scott-Reimer

How to Use This Guide

This is not a study in silence. It's a reclamation — of your voice, your worth, your witness. Each day, you'll be invited into the story of a woman from Scripture who spoke, led, or resisted when the world told her to be quiet.

Let their stories remind you:

You were never meant to shrink.

You were made to bear fruit.

Start each day with the reading. Pause. Reflect. Write. And remember — the Garden isn't lost. It's waiting for you to speak life again.

Instructions:

1. Set Aside Time: Find a quiet space where you can connect with your spirit.
2. Read the Scripture: Meditate on the verse and allow it to resonate within you.
3. Reflect: Read the reflection with an open heart and mind.
4. Journal: Answer the prompt honestly and vulnerably. Let your pen be an extension of your soul.

Day 1: You Were Always Part of the Plan

Scripture: "God created them in His image — male and female." (Genesis 1:27)

Reflection: Before sin, before shame, before patriarchy — there was a woman, formed by divine hands. Eve was not an afterthought. She was the culmination.

To reclaim your voice is to return to the truth that your dignity is older than any doctrine that tried to silence you.

Journal Prompt: Where in your life have you accepted silence as your place? What would it look like to reclaim it?

Day 2: Your Yes Still Matters

Scripture: “Let it be unto me according to your word.” (Luke 1:38)

Reflection: Mary said yes to the impossible and the Kingdom began to grow in her womb.
She wasn’t protected from scandal or sorrow.
But her yes echoed through eternity.
What you carry may be hidden now. But it is holy.

Journal Prompt: What is God asking you to say yes to, even if no one else understands it yet?

Day 3: Under a Palm Tree

Scripture: “Villagers in Israel would not fight; they held back until I, Deborah, arose, until I arose, a mother in Israel.” (Judges 5:7)

Reflection: Deborah didn’t wait for someone to crown her.
She rose — in the middle of generational chaos — as a mother in Israel.
Her leadership wasn’t about permission. It was about peace.
She didn’t clamor for power. She offered presence.
Under a palm tree, she judged disputes. On the battlefield, she spoke courage.
Through her obedience, a whole generation found rest.
Deborah shows us that godly leadership flows not from platform or position, but from a heart that listens to God and dares to act.

Journal Prompt: Where in your life are you being asked to bring peace through wisdom?
How can you lead with the strength and tenderness of a spiritual mother — even without a title?

Day 4: Your Courage Can Rewrite the Ending

Scripture: “The Lord has given you this land.” (Joshua 2:9)

Reflection: Rahab was not who people expected. But she saw what others couldn’t.
She aligned with God before the walls fell.
Sometimes faith means choosing the side of truth before the battle is even over.
And her scarlet cord still waves, a banner of courage in unexpected places.

Journal Prompt: Where are you being asked to align with truth before the outcome is secure?

Day 5: Your Voice Can Build the Church

Scripture: “She explained to him the way of God more accurately.” (Acts 18:26)

Reflection: Priscilla didn't preach in stadiums.
But her theology shaped the future of the Church.
God isn't asking you to shout louder, just to speak faithfully.
Your wisdom matters. Use it.

Journal Prompt: What truths do you carry that others might need to hear?

Day 6: Your Grief Doesn't Disqualify You

Scripture: "I have seen the Lord." (John 20:18)

Reflection: Mary Magdalene stood in a garden weeping and was the first to preach resurrection.
Grief didn't steal her calling. It clarified it.
The voice that called her by name still speaks to you.
And it sends you, not because you are strong, but because you are seen.

Journal Prompt: What truth have you been entrusted with that the world still needs to hear?

Day 7: You're Not Asking Too Much

Scripture: "What the daughters of Zelophehad say is right." (Numbers 27:7)

Reflection: They asked for inheritance — and God said yes.
Their request changed the law for generations.
Your boldness is not rebellion. It is reformation.
When you ask for space in the promise, you're not disrupting the Kingdom — you're fulfilling it.

Journal Prompt: What holy request are you ready to make — for yourself, your daughters, or your church?

Reclaim your voice. Embrace your power. Transform your world.
